Bedford-Stuyvesant

Bedford-Stuyvesant is located in the north/central part of Brooklyn. The neighborhood is bordered by Clinton Hill to the east (Classon Avenue), Prospect Heights and Crown Heights to the south (Atlantic Avenue), and Bushwick to the north-east (Broadway).

Commuters will find it easy to get into, out of, and around the neighborhood. Over a dozen bus lines, as well as 3 subway lines, serve Bed-Stuy. The A/C train runs along the neighborhood's southern edge, the J/M/Z line crosses the eastern part of Bed-Stuy, and the G train connects north-west Bed-Stuy residents to the rest of Downtown as well as Williamsburg. Only a couple of stops away, the Atlantic-Pacific hub offers a confluence of 11 train lines, another dozen or so buses, and access to the LIRR.

Drivers will appreciate the proximity to 3 bridges, as well as avenues that offer a direct path to other areas of Brooklyn. Another reason for Bed-Stuy's newfound popularity is its proximity to the 585-acre Prospect Park and the Grand Army Plaza complex. The park offers a selection of nature-related activities, its own 114-acre forest and a 90-acre meadow, as well as a complete sports & entertainment complex. The plaza complex includes the Brooklyn Museum of Art, the main building of the Brooklyn Public Library, several subway stops, and convenient shopping areas.
